

The Dam Builders Railways from Durhams Dales to the Border: And Linked Branch Lines of the N.E.R. and N.B.R.

The fifth volume in this series tells the fascinating story of the men and machines who built the dams and reservoirs across north-eastern England into Carlisle from the mid-19th century until the 1930s. The railways and tramways for the water projects used a variety of gauges (2, 3, 48) and the book stretches from north Yorkshire across the wild moors of Waskerley and Wearhead, west via the Alston and Brampton Railway to Geltsdale and then to the Catcleugh Railway before arriving at Fontburn which was closely linked to the North British Railway branch line from Scotsgap to Rothbury, finally concluding with a look at the North Eastern Railway lines. Throughout the book, the authors knowledge not just of the machines but also of the old hands bring the engines, men and scenery alive. This is essential reading for all those interested in secondary and industrial railways as well as the social and industrial history of North Yorkshire, Cumberland, Durham and Northumberland. Illustrated throughout with black and white photos and several maps. 144 pages.
