

The Paths of Inland Commerce, a Chronicle of Rail, Road and Waterway (Chronicles of America, Volume 21)

211 pages. A fascinating view of what the author terms the vital factor in the national development of America -- transportation. Writing of what he called the old jostling and challenging the new, Hulbert describes pack-horsemen demolishing wagons in the early days of the Allegheny traffic; wagoners deriding Clintons Ditch; angry boatmen anxious to ram the paddle wheels of Fultons Clermont, which threatened their monopoly. He names the Washingtons, the Fultons, the Fitches, the Coopers and the Whitneys who saw visions and dreamed dreams, only to face skepticism and hostility from those whom they would serve. The book includes a color frontispiece picture of Conestoga wagons on the National Road through Pennsylvania, 1830-1840 from a painting by Jefferys; as well as a fold-out map showing 1784-1860 Transportation Routes by W.L.G. Joerg of the American Geographical Society.
