

Saving the Media from the Internet: An Essay for the Merger of Copyright and Privacy

Media profits have been cut to the point that investigative journalism is under threat. It could mean that the corrupt and powerful are not held to account in future. Meanwhile, copyright owners are losing income, consumers are losing privacy and governments are spying on us like never before. The internet is to blame for many of these changes and is so powerful that it might seem like there is nothing we can do. Yet the people who want more protection and privacy could help each other. This essay is an attempt to create a merger of interests through a pricing model that combines copyright with personal data. Outcomes could also be shaped by an online mall environment that changes our culture of e-commerce. We should get more of what we want as a society, including investigative journalism and other creative works. Social norms, price discrimination, online abuse, classification rules, pornography, sex education and cybercrime are also discussed.
